Alfred Nobel was a chemist, engineer, inventor of dynamite, and founder of the Bofors Ordnance Factory. The world famous Nobel Prize was established in his name. According to his will written in 1895, since 1901, this award has been given to organizations and institutions to individuals who have made outstanding efforts and researches in the fields of physics, chemistry, medicine, peace, literature, and carried forward science. The financial prize has been awarded by the Bank of Sweden since 1969 in honor of Alfred Nobel.

The Nobel Prizes carry the highest reward and also the world's prestige. All but one Nobel Peace Prize will be awarded at Stockholm on December 10, Nobel's birthday. The Nobel Peace Prize is awarded in Oslo, the capital of Norway.

Alfred Nobel made over 350 inventions and patents in his lifetime. The Nobel family earned crores of rupees by establishing the Bofors arms factory and several companies around the world. Nobel was deeply saddened to see that his inventions were used for human destruction rather than for the benefit of the development of the human race. In 1888, a 'merchant of death' who traded in the lives of French newspapers died when his brother died in Paris.

The news wrote that Nobel, deeply upset by this, is said to have designed the Nobel Prizes so that people would remember his legacy well in the future. On 10 December 1896, Alfred Nobel died of a brain haemorrhage in Sanremo, Italy.
